PAST captions (75 words MAX +/-10%):

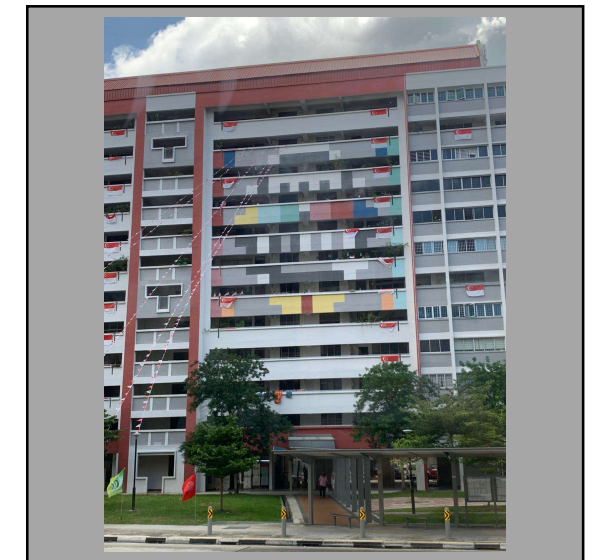

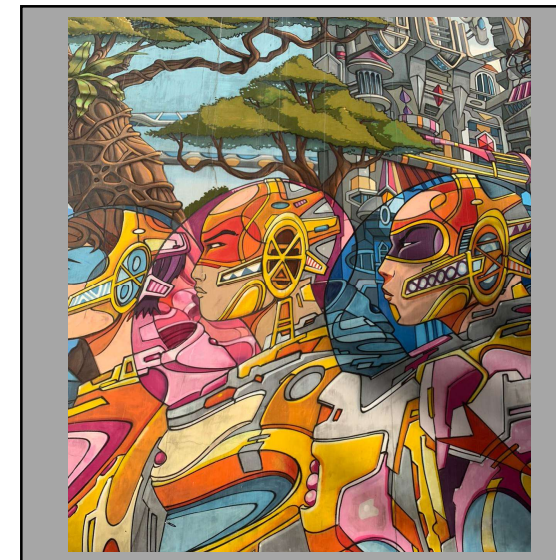

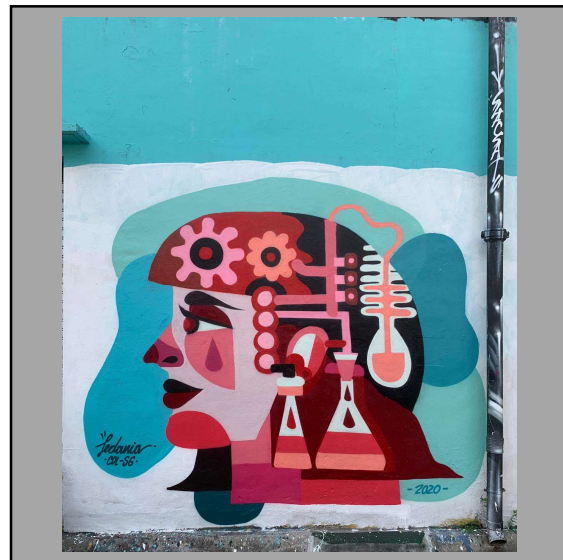

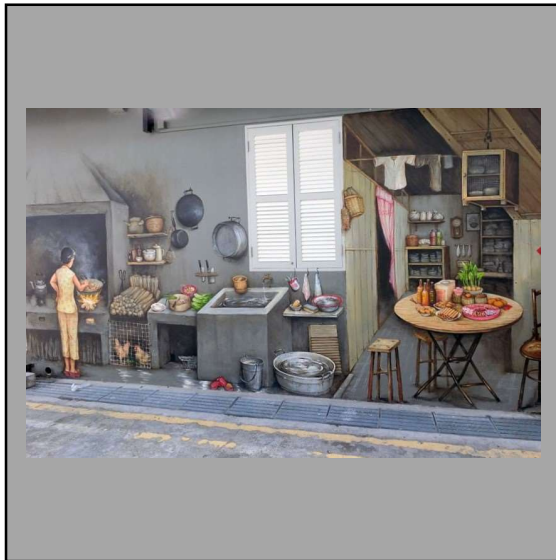

Street art was considered as vandalism in the early 90’s of Singapore as it was mainly used by Loan Sharks and gang members. This led to Singapore ban of street art on certain areas as the government wanted to establish a reputation for its cleanliness. This allow artist to at least practise their craft despite these conditions on “allowed walls”. Hence you occasionally see signs in void decks that showed no spray painting.

PRESENT captions (100 words MAX +/-10%):

Singapore government wanted to promote to tourism however they felt Singapore was not as vibrant as other country. Singapore tourism board hence worked with local street artists to brighten up our streets with new designs. They began painting things of the past to allow visitors understand how things were like then compared to the present Singapore. Hence it has become a way to express Singapore's multi-cultural background. Currently most local designed street art is mainly found in Haji Lane and The Blackbook studio, while other designs commissioned by the government can be found near tourist attractions. Local street artist is on a decline as there are lesser walls to work with.

FUTURE captions (75 words MAX +/-10%):

Singapore is a small island which means there are lesser spots to draw. With this, most of local street artist travel overseas to express their interest as airfares are cheaper compared to other years. However, BlackBook Studio has come up with ideas to ensure creators can express their ideas. Similarly, some street artist transfers their painting on to T-Shirts, badges, and posters for people to buy.
